3004	Honestly if we make Loudoun County a friendly place for people in the special needs community, you will end up appealing to more than the specials needs, your platform reaches everyone who interacts with them. For instance, I have a son that is diagnosed with autism. He has come into contact with 6 case workers through the child find process alone. We have been in contact with over 10 school officials with education alone. He has had 8 medical professionals/therapists that have assisted in our journey. We have interacted with 3 law enforcement officials for Project Lifesaver for my son. We have over 12 family members that regularly see him. All of these people, live, work, and travel to Loudoun County every single day. He has touched so many people in our community. If the community accommodates people like my son you breakdown these barriers and discourage seclusion from ever entering our lives. Autism awareness and education is a must. Ensuring the special education program in Loudoun County is one of the best in the entire country is pivotal. This is something that Fairfax County is surpassing us by far. We can lead by example and I know we can do it. Businesses open sensory friendly hours or areas for their families. Community outreach to special education programs and classes to come and enjoy whatever makes Loudoun special would be huge. Highlighting those business that practice inclusion would be great as well.			Community Services
